

Simple Sample Publishing Agreement

This one was proposed by some copyright professors. The journal would probably want more assurance that its publication would be exclusive for at least the first year, but otherwise this pretty much gets the job done.

--

[] ("Author") hereby grants to the [] (the "Law Review") exclusive first publication rights in Author's article "[]" (the "Article"), and further grants Law Review a non-exclusive license to make and distribute copies of the Article for the duration of its copyright, including without limitation a license to distribute the Article to electronic publishing services such as Westlaw and Lexis and to other electronic content aggregators.

Law Review agrees to publish the Article in Volume [], Issue No. [].

Ownership of the copyright in the Article remains with the Author.

Author agrees that any republications of the Article by the Author will bear a citation to the original publication of the Article in the Law Review, in a format substantially similar to the following:
"[]."

Author warrants that the Article is original, that he is the owner of the copyright in the Article, and that he has the power to grant the aforementioned rights and licenses.